HP STATEMENT ON WALTER HEWLETT'S USE OF DECEPTIVE CLAIMS
ABOUT VALUE CREATION TO MISLEAD HP SHAREOWNERS

PALO ALTO, Calif., Feb. 22, 2002 -- Hewlett-Packard Company (NYSE:HWP) today issued the following statement in response to Walter Hewlett's continued use of unsubstantiated claims to mislead HP shareowners about the value that would be created by his so-called "plan/framework/guidelines/strategy."

Walter Hewlett has provided no credible support for his claim that his "plan/framework/guidelines/strategy" will increase the value of HP by $14 to $17 per share, which is irresponsible at a time when shareowners should expect unusually transparent and reliable disclosure from directors of public companies.

Walter Hewlett says his "plan/framework/guidelines/strategy" will increase HP's share price by approximately 75 percent to 90 percent from current levels within 18 months -- a prediction that defies common sense.

He invents $14 to $17 of so-called value by manipulating earnings projections and inventing stock multiples. For example, his arbitrary assumption that HP can double its operating margins in 18 months and achieve earnings per share (EPS) levels 21 percent above First Call estimates defies credibility -- and accounts for $12 per share of his so-called value creation.

Edgar Filing: HEWLETT PACKARD CO - Form 425

He applies these invented earnings to an arbitrarily inflated price earnings (P/E) multiple -- inexplicably 21 percent higher than what he calls "Current P/E". This accounts for another $4 to $5 per share of his so-called value. When you strip away these unsubstantiated earnings and multiple assumptions, Walter's "plan/framework/guidelines/strategy" offers nothing new and no value creation.

In short, Walter Hewlett wants shareowners to believe he can virtually double HP's stock price in 18 months through a status quo approach with no cost savings. We don't understand how Walter Hewlett could make such baseless claims. We can only assume that his financial analysis is the work of his "independent" advisors who stand to gain $12 million if the merger is defeated and who have no understanding of HP's business and have not consulted with HP managers to substantiate their numbers.

By contrast, HP's careful and conservative financial analysis reflects the combined judgments of both management teams and boards, and has been stress-tested by more than 500,000 man-hours of integration planning. HP offers a real plan based on real numbers that will deliver real value.

The issues before HP shareowners are far too important to be confused by these deceptive tactics. HP will continue to address the merger on its merits, with our positions supported by careful and conservative financial analysis. We ask Walter Hewlett to do the same.
