Background Information

Comunitel is a leading alternative telecommunications operator offering advanced solutions to businesses and high end residential customers in Spain. Comunitel was founded in 1998 and was one of the first operators to hold a fixed line telecommunications licence in the Spanish market. With the aim of extending its telecommunications operations outside Portugal, ONI purchased Comunitel in June 2001 from Grapes Communications N.V.. Comunitel subsequently purchased Ola Internet S.A. a leading internet service provider in 2002 and fully integrated its operations into Comunitel on January 1, 2005.

Core to its strategy, Comunitel exploits the growing needs for communications products and solutions among Spanish businesses by providing competitively priced, bundled services tailored to Small and Medium Enterprises (SMEs), Large Enterprises and Single Owner/Home Office customers (SoHos) and more recently the top end of the residential market. Comunitel had 79,070 customers at end March 2005, of which 12,453 were direct ULL customers, 391 other direct customers and 66,226 indirect customers. Of the direct and indirect customers, approximately 63,000 were SoHos, 14,000 were SMEs and 1,400 were Large Enterprises.

Since 1998 Comunitel has installed a national telecommunications network. The Company operates a 16,730 km backbone fibre network across Spain (of which 10,108 km are owned and 6,622 km are leased via IRUs) composed of 5 regional rings. The backbone network is connected to the incumbent's local access networks via leased circuits within cities at 191 locations in 79 cities across Spain to provide the final link to the Comunitel's customers. Comunitel's network is currently within close reach of approximately 50% of the Spanish business communications market. The network footprint is independent from Telefónica's network, and provides a platform for the deployment of end-to-end services independently of other operators' networks. Comunitel also leases an international network connecting Spain to London, New York and Guayaquil.

Germinus XXI S.A. (Germinus) provides IT consulting services and innovative technology solutions to businesses in Spain, and was founded in February 2002. Germinus is in the process of being legally integrated in the Comunitel Group, though Germinus' operations were already integrated in the Comunitel Group companies from a management perspective
