The NASDAQ OMX and IntercontinentalExchange Proposal

to Acquire NYSE Euronext

-Briefing Document-

Main elements of the transaction

NASDAQ OMX (NDAQ) and IntercontinentalExchange (ICE) announced on 1st April that they have made a joint proposal to acquire NYSE Euronext (NYX) for cash and stock consideration valued at US$42.50 per NYSE Euronext share, or approximately US$11.3 billion, based on the respective NASDAQ OMX and ICE closing share prices as of 31st March 2011. This reflected a 19 percent premium over the price proposed by Deutsche Börse, based on Deutsche Börse's closing share price, and a 27 percent premium over NYSE Euronext's unaffected stock price the day prior to NYSE Euronext's disclosure of the Deutsche Börse transaction.

As background, on 9th February 2011, NYSE Euronext and Deutsche Börse announced their plan to merge. ICE and NASDAQ OMX conducted a sum-of-the-parts analysis to evaluate the financial, industrial and competitive implications of such a merger. Based on the analysis, NASDAQ OMX and ICE believed that the proposed NASDAQ OMX-ICE transaction would be more attractive on each of these criteria, while preserving several financial market centres in Europe.

Under the terms of the proposed acquisition, NYSE Euronext stockholders would receive US$14.24 in cash, plus 0.4069 shares of NASDAQ OMX common stock and 0.1436 shares of ICE common stock for each NYSE Euronext share. In the proposed DB/NYSE transaction, stockholders of NYSE will receive 40% of the new company and no cash, and shareholders of DB will receive 60% of the new company and no cash.

The NASDAQ OMX-ICE proposal would not lead to the companies acquiring joint control of NYSE Euronext. Rather, ICE would acquire NYSE Euronext's European derivatives businesses and NASDAQ OMX would acquire NYSE Euronext's equity-related businesses, including the NYSE Euronext stock exchanges in Paris, Brussels, Amsterdam and Lisbon. A combination of NASDAQ OMX and NYSE Euronext would merge the equities, US and Nordic equity options and technology businesses of the two companies to create a leading group of international exchanges, with a geographic footprint in sixteen countries and best-in-class technology that is relied upon in over 60 markets internationally.

ICE and NASDAQ OMX will continue to operate as separate businesses throughout the proposed transaction, as well as after its completion.

Main benefits of the transaction

Edgar Filing: NYSE Euronext - Form 425

Creates a global exchange company in equities, options and exchange related technology to compete in the increasingly competitive global exchange market

Creates a global derivatives exchange operator that would ensure the continuation of competition across Europe and the US

Offers greater long-term value for customers by putting existing businesses under managements recognised for integration capabilities, growth and efficiency

Strengthens European and US cash equities market centres to remain globally competitive, which is critical for raising capital and creating jobs

Strengthens the ability of regulators to oversee markets, reduces market fragmentation and flash-crash scenarios

A combined NASDAQ OMX and NYSE Euronext would have attractive competitive positions across its major business lines, including a world-class cash trading business in European equities. ICE's acquisition of NYSE Euronext's European derivatives business, NYSE Liffe, would strengthen ICE's competitive position across derivatives markets in Europe and the US.

NASDAQ OMX and ICE each have significant experience integrating exchange businesses and have proven track records of realising synergies ultimately benefitting their customers. The two companies expect US$740 million in total net synergies fully realised by the end of the third year following the closing of the transaction – equivalent to 23% of the combined NYSE Euronext, NASDAQ OMX and ICE operating expenses in 2010 (Source: respective SEC Form 10-Ks).

European Benefits

This transaction creates a new pan-European equity market and separately, a new force in European global derivatives markets. It allows for competition and choice, providing customers, stockholders and regulators with vibrant markets, capable of competing globally for trading and listings.

NASDAQ OMX and NYSE Euronext

The combination of NASDAQ OMX and NYSE Euronext would create a leading securities market globally while strengthening Europe's competitiveness, with licences in 16 different European countries and a well-diversified revenue base. Pro forma, it will also be the premier venue for international listings and the number one provider of commercial exchange technology.

Together, a combined NASDAQ OMX and NYSE Euronext would have nearly 1,800 listed companies, worth US$4,000 billion in market capitalization and would provide trading services for approximately 22% of Pan-European equity trading.

The governance of NASDAQ OMX and NYSE Euronext would be based on local licences held by local legal entities headed up by local exchange heads. This is consistent with NASDAQ OMX's track record of investing in the Nordic market centres and employing local governance, while growing those exchanges. In order to govern properly the four new marketplaces (Paris, Amsterdam, Lisbon & Brussels), one holding entity would be maintained in Europe in the same way as the existing NASDAQ OMX Holding Ltd entity. The Board of Directors of this holding company would consist of independent directors.

In summary, the combination of NASDAQ OMX and NYSE Euronext would create a new truly pan-European equity trading platform with locally-governed exchanges and the ability to effectively compete, innovate and serve users, without reducing competitive choices in obtaining post-trade services in Europe.

ICE and Liffe

The combination of ICE and Liffe would result in the addition of a strong competitor in the European listed derivatives markets, with combined pro-forma annual net revenues of approximately US$1.8bn. Together, the new entity would offer a range of traded and cleared derivatives, serving demand for derivatives products in interest rates, energy, agricultural commodities, index products, foreign exchange and credit.

ICE will deploy its world-class technology in the Liffe markets and will provide clearing services through ICE Clear Europe, ensuring a vibrant marketplace and run-rate synergies of approximately US$200m per year, fully delivered by the end of year three.

The ICE Liffe combination will ensure that European derivatives markets remain highly competitive, whereas under the alternative proposal, the DB/NYSE group would acquire a 97.6% share of European exchange-traded interest rate derivatives. Under the ICE Liffe combination, ICE Clear Europe will provide clearing services for Liffe's London business, thereby helping to increase competition in the market for European clearing and establishing a third major clearing house of interest rate derivatives alongside LCH.Clearnet and Deutsche Boerse.

Edgar Filing: NYSE Euronext - Form 425

In summary, a NASDAQ OMX / NYSE Euronext and an ICE / Liffe combination will strengthen competition and innovation in European equity and derivative markets to the benefit of all market participants.
