Subject: Integration Planning Update

The purpose of this note is to update you on progress with planning to merge and integrate the Playtex Products, Inc. and Schick-Wilkinson Sword organizations. Integration planning is proceeding as planned as we approach close, which is just over two weeks away.

General Update

Over the past several weeks, the functional design teams have made great progress. The design teams continue to provide bi-weekly progress reports to the Integration Leadership Team, which has senior membership from both the Schick and Playtex organizations. Some of the key items that the integration teams have been working on are the following:

Identifying key integration issues and key mitigation steps,

Identifying best practices ,

Developing system requirements and required actions to ensure process harmonization across the businesses,

Identifying the organization structure for each functional area that will support the business needs going forward.

As you can imagine with a merger of this size, there are numerous issues that the teams are working through to effectively integrate the people, processes and systems, all while trying to stay focused on managing the day to day operations of two strong businesses. It is important to realize that the teams have not yet completed their work, and organization design work is still in progress.

Assessment and Selection Process

As has been mentioned in previous Integration memos, our final organization designs are expected to be completed by early to Mid-October. Once they are completed, the selection process as previously described in the update memo from David Hatfield and Neil DeFeo will begin. As a reminder, some key elements of the selection process to keep in mind are as follows:

Playtex and Schick are committed to creating opportunities for career enhancement for our employees for the long-term. Our selection process is designed to retain the top talent from both organizations.

Once the organization design has been finalized, representatives from both Playtex and Schick will jointly assess talent from both organizations and make selection decisions, using guidelines set by the Integration Steering Committee.

Positions will be filled starting with the most senior level roles first (e.g., Vice Presidents).

Generally, colleagues will not be interviewed, but will be assessed based on demonstrated past performance, current capabilities, and future potential. Colleagues in most functional areas at Schick and Playtex will undergo an assessment. Functional areas in which colleagues may not be assessed are: (1) functions not impacted by the integration because they will continue as structured today, or (2) functional areas that exist today that will not be part of the new organizational structure.

When making placement decisions, consideration will also be given to continuity on the business, current knowledge of job, and practicality of relocation.

Some functional teams may begin assessment and selection activity earlier than others in order to meet the needs of their business. For example, to fulfill our goal of having a single sales force as quickly as possible, the sales team may begin assessment and selection activity in mid-September.

Most decisions and offers will be made between early October and November 15th, assuming an October 1st close of the merger. We aim to inform as many colleagues as possible of decisions before that time, although some selection activity may carry over into the first quarter of calendar 2008.

Final Thoughts

We recognize that this is both an exciting time for the business, and somewhat stressful for our people driven by the uncertainty. We also understand that speculation about the future is only natural, but please bear with us, as we're working hard to make decisions that are best for the new organization as quickly as possible while being sensitive to all our colleagues. Ultimately, the vision of the integration is to become the best Personal Care Company, to deliver cost savings to reinvest for growth, to drive international expansion and to increase career development for our colleagues. We thank you in advance for your understanding and cooperation as we continue to go forward. We are open to hearing your feedback or concerns, and remember, we will communicate regularly to all employees as progress and decisions are made.
