To remain static is to lose ground.

Bill Hewlett and Dave Packard understood that in the face of change, HP could choose to lead or to follow. Always, they chose to lead.

As Dave Packard wrote:

*Continuous growth was essential for us to achieve our other objectives and to remain competitive. Since we participate in fields of advanced and rapidly changing technologies, to remain static is to lose ground. **

When it made sense, they led with innovation from within. But when the market demanded it, they acquired companies whose technologies and products complemented their own. While some doubted these moves even then, the HP Way has proven bold enough to embrace change, and flexible enough to absorb it.

Today our industry is again in the midst of profound transformation, driven by technical advances, intensified competition and changing customer requirements.

The merger of HP and Compaq is a renewal of HP's traditional aims, adapted to new technological times.

Together, we will be leaders in servers, storage, management software, PCs, services, and printing and imaging. Together, we will offer the end-to-end solutions customers now demand. Together, we will compete more powerfully than either company could on its own. Together, we expect to generate the earnings growth our shareowners deserve; indeed, we believe cost-savings alone will add $5 to $9 of present value to each HP share.

To stand still--in these times, of all times--is to fall behind.

That is certainly not the HP Way.
