TAIWAN FUND

QUARTERLY REPORT

September 30, 2002

Dear Stockholders

The Fund's net asset value per share (NAV) declined 14.0% in the third quarter, outperforming the 18.7% fall in the Taiwan Stock Exchange Index (TAIEX) despite the New Taiwan dollar's 3.9% depreciation against the U.S. dollar during the period.

The TAIEX performance took place against the backdrop of the worst quarterly loss of U.S. equities in almost 15 years as measured by the 18% drop in both the Standard & Poor's 500 Index and Dow Jones Industrial Average. The Taiwan market, in fact, tracked its American counterpart fairly closely through ups and downs, and both suffered declines each month during the third quarter.

To be sure, the Taiwan market moved higher early in the period on news of continuing export strength and rising memory-chip prices. By mid-July, however, the steep fall in the American equity market eventually started to reverberate, raising concern that it would be a drag on economic recovery. And after U.S. technology giants Intel and Microsoft lowered annual forecasts amid signs of weak demand, Taiwan's two largest semiconductor companies both chimed in with warnings of a downturn in their business.

Political developments also weighed on investors. The biggest single-day fall in share prices during the period followed President Chen Shui-bian's early August remarks characterizing the two sides of the Taiwan Strait as separate countries and calling for a referendum on Taiwan independence. These comments damped optimism that Taipei and Beijing might establish direct transportation and trade links in the not too distant future. But the market quickly rebounded, sparked by a big surge in the U.S. and the announcement that Taiwan's second quarter economic growth was a higher than expected 4%.

After a brief August rally, the downward trend resumed later that same month and then accelerated. In September, the TAIEX declined 12%--the steepest fall for the year. Uncertainty over demand for technology products dominated as many Taiwan computer-related companies lowered annual forecasts and warned that customers were demanding lower prices after sales failed to rebound. Signs of a weakening American economy added to the gloom. U.S. consumer confidence dipped for a fourth straight month, factory production fell, and the Federal Reserve expressed concern about slowing growth.

Strong external demand continued to be the main driver of Taiwan's economy in the third quarter. The 19% leap in merchandise exports--equivalent to roughly 40% of gross national product--more than tripled the rate of increase of the previous quarter. This performance was largely due to a 41% surge in shipments to China (including Hong Kong), which absorbed almost a third of total exports in the period. On the domestic front, private investment recovered strongly with an estimated double-digit rate of growth after contracting for seven consecutive quarters. Private consumption, however, remained relatively weak as a result of continuing high unemployment and the lackluster stock market. We estimate that the economy advanced 3.8% in the third quarter and forecast 3.1% growth for the full year.

The Taiwan market should rally in the fourth quarter as the technology industry enters what is usually its peak season. The Fund will therefore remain fully invested in a highly diversified portfolio. In the technology area, we especially like the prospects of makers of handsets (mobile phones) and related components, broadband networking equipment, and CD-RW drives (CD recorders)--including the companies that design ICs for these drives. As previously disclosed in a press release (full text available on the Fund's website at HTTP://WWW.ROCTAIWANFUND.COM/RRN.HTM) issued earlier this month, a significant portion of our investments are in Taiwan companies whose business is becoming increasingly integrated with the economy of China, and the Fund intends to continue, and perhaps increase, this focus. These include Taiwan technology companies, whose factories in China account for a large part of that country's high-tech exports. We are also targeting firms in traditional industries that are benefiting from rising demand as the Chinese economy continues to be one of the world's best performers.

We appreciate your support and look forward to discussing our market outlook and portfolio strategy with you in future reports.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ Michael Ding
