TELECOM ITALIA AWARDS MARCONI EURO 80 M NEXT GENERATION ACCESS NETWORK CONTRACT

New network infrastructure will develop new services and reduce operating costs; new GBP50 million contract for the supply of the access network awarded to Marconi

London, February 4, 2003 - Marconi (MONI) today announced that it has been awarded a two year frame contract worth an estimated 80 million Euro (GBP52 million) to help Telecom Italia develop a new broadband network that will allow the introduction of advanced multimedia services. The initiative, which is in line with the wider investment plan that Telecom Italia has in place for developing broadband, will allow the operator to upgrade its existing telephone exchanges to next generation technologies through a replacement of its existing access layer.

Marconi will supply its Access Hub platform and work alongside Italtel, which will supply switching technology and professional services, to build the new network infrastructure.

Marconi's Access Hub technology will enable the distribution of a variety of services to end users such as xDSL, traditional telephony and ISDN, interacting both with traditional telephone exchanges and with next generation, internet protocol (IP)-based systems.

The Marconi Access Hub is a multiservice access platform already in use in Telecom Italia's network.

"Thanks to this initiative, Telecom Italia is proceeding with its strategy of being a worldwide leader both in technological innovation and in the provision of high quality services on which we continue to invest significantly," said Stefano Pileri, Networks Director of Telecom Italia Domestic Wireline. "Thanks to this project, Marconi is confirmed as an important Telecom Italia partner, further widening its role as a strategic supplier of our network".

Giorgio Bertolina, Executive Chairman of Marconi Communications S.p.A. said: "Telecom Italia is making significant investments in its access and switching network with the aim of providing its customers with multimedia and IP services in addition to traditional voice telephony services. This can happen today thanks to our broadband access platform."

"Once completed, the new network will allow the operator to "naturally" transition its customers towards a "triple play" ADSL service offering voice, data and video services alongside broadband Internet."
